

and heavy toil that has been, and still is the fate of a large proportion of the human race, we may, taking it by and large say with gratitude

"Thou maintainest my lot

The lives are fallen unto me in pleasant places.

Yea, I have a goodly heritage".

G. des Barrow.

1942.

Note: I must leave it to the descendent of Simon Barrow of Bath to complete the record for their respective families of this generation, as I have done for my own.
